Postal Service.

The following able article is from a recent issue of the Edmonton Bulletin. It contains much information of interest to distant readers and likewise administrators a just criticism to the postal department, hence we reproduce it in full.

The report of the post office department for the year ending June 30th, 1902, is to hand. A comparative statement shows a surplus of receipts over expenditures of something over five thousand dollars as against a deficit of over three-quarters of a million dollars in the year ending June 30th, 1896. No wonder the post master general "goats with pride" to such magnificent evidence of the purity and capacity of his administration. There is no getting away from facts. The cost of postage has been cut down one third and the revenue more than meets expenditure while under the former administration with a postal rate one-third higher the deficit was twenty per cent of the revenue. Many reasons may be brought forward to account for the difference, but none of them would be any good if it were not for clean, capable and economical administration.

Under the former government the post office expenditure was in the nature of the postal machine. Contracts were given without regard to value or quality of the service. Mail contracts and post offices were looked upon as the legitimate prey of the avaricious and energetic party worker. Under such circumstances it was no wonder that the revenue fell so far short of the expenditure. And the fact that revenue now exceeds the expenditure is incontrovertible proof that whatever else may be wrong with the post office administration the public money is not wasted for party or any other purposes. This is very satisfactory, and to the energetic minister, and to the government of which he is a member, should be given due credit.

But the coin is another side to the question. "Something that a man of the positive nature of Hon. Sir William Mulock is apt to forget: it would be unkind and unfriendly to let him and the government know that however commendable, clean and economical administration it is not everything. For any branch of the public service to be valuable it must be efficient. It is not economy to spend $100 in providing a service that is not useful, when a few dollars more would make it thoroughly useful. Neither is it economy to refuse needed services on the mere ground that they cost money. The Bulletin takes the liberty to say that in so far as the view of the post master general is that his department should be run so that value should be given directly and indirectly for every cent expended it is absolutely right. But when he takes the view that the merits of his administration lie in making the post office department pay its way he is absolutely wrong. The policy based upon that view is mistaken and injurious, and in the minds of the people to whom it is applied overcomes all the merit of the economical features in which the post master general takes so much pride. The Bulletin takes the liberty to remind the post master general that the direct returns from the carriage of mails is the smallest of the considerations which cause the service to be rendered. A postal service is instituted because of the benefit that it will be to general public, not for the sake of the revenue expected. And when he grants or withholds postal accommodations on the mere ground of insufficient revenue he is using the wrong measure.

Of course it is necessary that many applications for mail service

P. J. Nasland was in from Buffalo lake Monday.

A good Singer sewing machine for sale at this office.

W. G. Merkley has filled the school house basement with No. 1 wood for the ensuing year.

E. R. Sage is doing homestead duties on his farm in Pleasant Valley east of Lacombe.

Miss Susie Stewart who has been staying with friends in town, left for her home fourteen miles east Wednesday.

Wednesday was the most disagreeable day of the season so far. A raw wind prevailed from the southeast and work was very unpleasant outdoors.

As Mr. Mair will be absent filling country appointments there will not be any service in the Presbyterian church on Sabbath morning, Dec 8.

The congregational meeting to be held Monday evening in the Presbyterian church will begin at 7 o'clock in order not to conflict with the town meeting at 8 o'clock.

A. L. Ball and F. M. Lee have spent the week hunting near Pigeon and Battle Lakes. They went "loaded for bear" and expect to return with all kinds of large game.

Rev. Perry will be at Lewisville next Sunday to conduct the opening services of a newly erected church at that place. Mrs. Perry will occupy the pulpit at this place in the evening.

The auction sale of W. A. Wiltse's chattels Monday was attended by a good sized crowd and bidding was brisk, prices ranging well up to the value of the articles sold. The weather while a little cold was favorable. Proceeds $850.

The people of the Asker settlement have arranged for a grand Christmas tree entertainment in their hall on the evening of the 26th inst. Also a grand ball will be given in the hall on New Year eve. The public cordially invited to both the entertainment and the ball.

It being necessary for me to be absent next Sunday Mrs. Perry will conduct services here in the evening. The sermon on "The Bible in Conflict with Science" will be delivered on the evening of Dec. 21. Other arrangements have been made for supplying country appointments.—T. P. PERRY.

Justus P. Vincent is now erecting a neat story-and-a-half residence on that portion of his homestead on the north side of the river, a mile up the trail from town. John Rathbun and L. B. Matusch are the builders. Mr. Vincent expects to leave shortly for a visit to his old home in Michigan and will probably be accompanied on his return by his wife.

A lyceum has been organized in the East Side school district. Next Friday evening the important question of whether Canada or the United States offers the greater inducements to the poor man will be discussed. The speakers on either side are making extensive preparations and the discussion promises to be quite lively. The public cordially invited.

Photographer Milne has an announcement to the public in this issue.

Clifford Stretch took up a load of supplies for the Rowley lumber camp the first of the week.

E. W. Buck was down from his lumbering camp at Battle lake the first of the week. More snow is needed in the camps.

A. Vold, who was threshing at Frank Scott's was in after repairs Monday evening. He reports grain yields quite satisfactory.

Clint Bailey arrived from Madison, S. D., with his car of effects Saturday, and has taken up his residence on his recently acquired possessions.

Word has been received by B. C. Groat that Mrs. Groat is getting along nicely in the hospital at Edmonton and will soon be out again, all of which her friends are glad to note.

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Stretch left on Tuesday for White, S. D., where Raymond has a position in store. He has rented his place here to B. H. Dye, having disposed of all his personal property.

Tate Cook and Wes. McClaffin did not make the trip to Pigeon lake with their engine in the time they expected. They had the misfortune to break down near Fairbank and came to town Saturday for repairs.

The latest rumors of the whereabouts of Ernest Cashe the escaped forger, is that he murdered a man down near Tail Creek, appropriated his victim's money, horse and clothing and has since been traced to the Montana line. That a murder was really committed near Tail Creek seems well founded. The body of the missing man is alleged to have been found floating in the river tied to a log.

Wants Land in Alberta.

OTTAWA, Nov. 19.—Rev. Mr. Barr, a Canadian by birth, but at present in orders in London, England, is in the city on business with the Department of the Interior. He wants to bring 2000 settlers from the Tower Hamlets of London and settle them in Alberta. He has submitted a scheme in writing to the Department, and wants to obtain the land in one district and bring out his immigrants next spring.

The above has reference to a brother of our townsman, John B. Barr. It is desired by Rev. Barr to locate his party somewhere in this part of Alberta if suitable arrangements can be made with the department.

The Weekly Round-Up of Items of Local and General Interest to Our Readers.

A New Year ball for the benefit of the Ponoka Band is being arranged for.

Mrs. Charley Brown left Monday for a three months' visit with relatives in Minnesota.

Owing to the absence of the pastor there will be no service in the Presbyterian church next Sunday.—J. A. Mair.

The HERALD welcomes an able news gatherer from Urquhart this week who will regularly keep our readers abreast of the times in that section.

Eugene Herrick was in from Urquhart Wednesday and gave us reports of several good grain yields in his section. Threshing is nearly done there.

G. W. Herrick and family have moved onto his farm two miles northwest of town. W. Dewilde has rented the property in town and will continue the boarding house.

S. Barker, manager of the Armstrong & Co. bank, this week purchased through Case & Fisher lot 20, block 5, across from the Methodist church, from James McKinney, of Aledo, Illinois.

Good prices were realized for the property sold at the Boggs' sale Tuesday. The registered Shorthorn cattle seemed in good demand and bidding on this stock was brisk. One two-year-old cow sold for $82. The proceeds of the sale amounted to about $1400.

Threshing has been going on in the Brooks school district north west of town the past week and some good yields are reported. F. S. Fish put in his granary some 1700 bushels of grain while some of his neighbors had considerable over this.

The numerous friends of Mrs. Wm. Snell sympathize with her in the sad intelligence of the death of her mother, who passed away in Sioux City, Iowa, last week. Death came so suddenly that Mrs. Snell was unable to be at her bedside.

Rev C. C. McLauren, Baptist General Missionary of Manitoba and Northwest Territories will address a meeting in the interests of Home Missions in the school hall Friday, December 12 at 7.30 p. m. The public is cordially invited to attend.

L. L. Wing last week purchased another quarter section of Alberta soil, making him in all an even section. This last purchase was what is known as the D. C. Gourlay place cornering his present possession and he paid $1000 for it.

W. A. Wiltse, with his family, departed yesterday. He was uncertain as to his destination when he left but will probably wind up somewhere in British Columbia. His friends think he would have been wiser so stay by what he had here, but wish him success wherever he locates.

Beat This in Dakota.

Here is a hard nut for our friends in the Western States to crack. L. L. Wing butchered a calf exactly seven months of age and received 360 pounds of the finest grade of meat. Lem says he has butchered two-year-old steers in South Dakota that did no better.

Dewilde—Bell.

At the residence of the bride's parents near Morningside on Wednesday evening occurred the marriage of Mr. W. J. Dewilde and Miss Jessie Bell, Rev. Mair officiating. A number of invited friends witnessed the ceremony. The happy young couple at once took up their residence in the Herrick building, Ponoka. Their many friends wish them a happy journey through life.

Correspondence.

Urquhart:

The farmers in this district are busy threshing now and the yield is quite satisfactory.

Mr. Johnson, our postmaster, has built a fine large granary this fall and last week put 4,978 bushels of grain in it, this year's crop.

William Henry, our genial blacksmith has just finished his new barn. It is 40x50, the largest in the township.

Mr. Westling has moved into his new house. It is the largest house in this part of the country and is complete throughout.

August Westling, who has been working at Calgary all summer has returned home.

Tom Jones, Baxter, and Irving Jones and Harry Bowtell went to Edmonton with three teams last week to work on railroad survey.

There is a rumor of a railroad survey from Lacombe through Long Valley to Buffalo lake and the Willow Creek country. Well let it come, we are here first.

Seymour Mosser has taken steps to final homestead proof and others are talking of doing the same. There will be a good many follow his example within the next year or two.

Good-bye until next week.

Morningside:

The new meat market is nearing completion.

Mr. and Mrs. Case, both cripples, were coming to Morningside last Monday and while driving down a steep hill the horses got frightened and ran away. Mr. Case was thrown out of the sleigh and was dragged about 20 rods before he succeeded in controlling his horse. Mr. Case was badly bruised and Mrs. Case was badly frightened but not hurt.

The dance and supper at the Hotel West last Thursday night was a grand success. Everybody had a good time. The crowd was not large therefore there was no crowding. Good music and a good floor manager and everything went smooth and quiet. Dancing broke up at 4 o'clock in the morning. The proprietors reports 20 numbers out. Another dance is contemplated in the near future.

Whitebrush:

A dance was given at Whitebrush Wednesday night of last week, and the affair was a success. About forty couples trooped the 1st fantastic till 4 a. m. and all reported most enjoyable time. Duckett's band furnished the music.

Ralph Bailey is enlarging and otherwise improving his residence.

It is hoped that mail service will be established here soon. When we have the mail service that we are entitled to we will be the most contented people on the globe. We shall then all become regular readers of the Ponoka HERALD and keep in touch with the doings of our neighbors.

The Whitebrush store and post office building and barn are completed. The goods are enroute and the proprietors hope to soon be open for the patronage of the public.

Miss Dewey is only conducting a day school at Highland Ranch—John Wilson's.

George Well's team ran away with him one day last week while enroute from Wetaskiwin. He was slightly injured being confined to his bed several days afterwards.

So long, more later.

IN THE DAYS OF VILLAINY

By GRACE MACGOWAN COOKE
Copyright, 1921, by Grace MacGowan Cooke

"We might kidnap him!"
"Don't be frivolous." She drew her dark brows and thought intently.
"I don't understand," she complained. "You want this report for your own paper, don't you? I chance to have inside information that you—that is, the Star—will have it exclusively. Doesn't that suit you?"

The young man turned his back to the room full of chattering people and put his broad shoulders between her telltale young face and prying eyes.

Their conversation was being held precariously at a crowded afternoon tea.

"Look here, girlie," he said, "it's just like this: Yesterday I was city man on the Star, with a good chance of promotion. I felt I had something to offer the girl I love. Today the Record might take me if I went to them with a scoop in my hand—and they're not making a living for the men they already have."

"Oh, Tom," cried the girl, with a note of keen distress in her carefully suppressed voice, "you've not lost your position! How was it?"

The young fellow nodded. "It's Betts," he returned gloomily. "You know what Betts is. I was all right with him till Mr. Markham noticed my work and (as I've been informed by a man on the inside) told Betts to push me as fast as possible, for he thought I'd make a good chief in my department. Betts won't keep a man on the staff who is a possible rival. He called me into his private room yesterday morning and gave me an order which he knew I'd refuse to execute. When I did so, he worked himself into a rage and discharged me. Well, I said some things an assistant can't say to his chief before the discharge came. Then I asked to be allowed to leave at once—and here I am. I've acted the fool. I'm not fit to be trusted with your future, dear. I"—His voice broke a little and sank into silence.

"You've done just as I would have you do," the girl returned loyally, "and now if you're off the Star and not on the Record how would this cotton mill scoop affect you?"

"It would square me with Betts if I could beat him on it, and if I could take it to the Record it would assure me a place there. But what's the use of talking? I've tried all I know, and I can't get a word of the story."

"If I thought it would be just right," she murmured, "Tom," looking at him anxiously, "you're very sure nobody will lose money by it if the Star gets left on this?"

"Oh, you mean outsiders! I'm telling you the truth when I say it won't make any difference whatever, financially, to anybody if the Record gets a scoop on this cotton mill business and publishes the fact first that Senator Morgan is in town looking for a site for the buildings."

"All right," said the girl, laughing a little. "You see, he's mother's cousin, and of course we went to the hotel to see him when he first came in yesterday morning. While we were there your Mr. Betts of the Star came up. He and Senator Morgan were in school together and are old friends."

"Mr. Betts is going down to Birmingham to attend a land sale, but I heard the senator promise him that he would not allow his name to be put on the hotel register nor permit any of the Record folks to find out that he was here."

"Mr. Betts was to send a reliable man around from the Star the next day—why, that's today, Tom. It's this very evening! And the senator was going to give him the details of the cotton mill scheme, with the names of all the eastern stockholders and, if he decides upon it, the exact location of the mill."

"Isn't that enough to make angels weep?" groaned Tom Harding.

"Poor Tom!" said the girl. "You look positively thin. Have a little more oyster pate. You'd feel amiable disposed toward anybody who would help you out on this, wouldn't you?"

"I'd love 'em for life. Well, I reckon I can tear down to the Record office and make the longest item I can out of the fact that I do know Senator Morgan is here and that his plans are coming on all right. They don't even know that much."

"Dear me!" confided the girl to her fan. "Men are stupid creatures!"

"But women aren't," said Harding gayly. "I know you've got a scheme in that pretty little head of yours."

"It's so easy," said the girl, yawning a little. "I heard Mr. Betts making the engagement for his man for late this evening, and the name he used was that of a gentleman of my acquaintance, a certain Mr. Thomas Harding. All you have to do is to go a little early. Then when the senator has told you all you want to know, why, you just say something a little disagreeable, so that when the real Star man comes Cousin John will be furious and won't see him. I'm ashamed of you to lack a bit of invention like that.

"Great Scott!" murmured Harding in awe. "You are worth any two men on the staff! Say, you ought to be a newspaper man's wife, do you know it?"
"I believe you said something like that to me before, and I have taken the matter under advisement. If I find a newspaper man that's worth having, why, well—"
She laughed saucily as she rose.

When Harding's card went up to the senator, it found that gentleman seated at a big desk with a pile of papers before him. "I'm glad that fellow's come," he said. "I have the stuff ready for him, and I want to get it off my hands."

Harding was most affably received. The full details and complete plans were furnished him, together with the architect's sketch of the proposed mill and a photograph of the senator for illustrative purposes.

As he rose to go, with his bundle of documents and well filled notebook in hand, he said: "By the way, senator, wasn't your name recently connected with some sort of a little story—er—scandal, I suppose straitlaced people would call it? It would add spice to an otherwise bald and uninteresting narrative if you'd let me ring that in. Don't you think so?"

The senator sat at his desk and looked at his interlocutor aghast. "Young man," he thundered, "put those papers—down!"

"Oh, no," said Harding; "the Star wants these papers," which was certainly the truth. "and as for the other business, why, you may be a deacon from Deconville for what I know. All sorts of things go into the papers."

The senator had risen and was coming toward him as he retreated. "You tell Mr. Betts for me," he roared, "that if he don't fire you I'll save him the trouble by wringing your neck for you!"

Then Tom Harding had an inspiration. "See here, senator," he said, "you're mad now. Oh, yes, you are. I can see it, though you dissemble it so beautifully. 'I'll go'—the senator was coming uncomfortably near just then—"but I'll be back in about half an hour, when you've had time to cool down."

What the senator said when the card of the genuine Star reporter was carried up to him just twenty minutes later has become legend and story in that hotel.

The bellboys gathered in a delighted cordon to hear him swear as he sent the message that if that idiot ever came back there again or sent anybody else from the paper he'd kill him.

The Star people continued to send men to interview the senator, who appeared to them to be demoniacally possessed. Failing to get even a glimpse of him, though they could hear the sound of his unutterable roarings down the corridor, they not unnaturally gathered the impression—indeed the impression was abroad pretty generally then—that the senator had been wine and dined rather too extensively, and as Betts, who would have saved them that crowning folly, was absent they hinted as much in the next morning's issue of the paper.

It was on this same morning that the Record brought out a complete illustrated history of Senator Morgan's cotton mill deal and a taking little biography and interview with the senator himself.

The cotton mill meant salvation to the overblown little southern town, and the Record's scoop in giving the first full and authoritative account of its location did several things. It gave the Record a standing long coveted and worked for. It gave Tom Harding a secure position on the Record staff and incidentally placed him where he felt able to marry.

Nobody but Tom Harding and Tom Harding's wife knows just how the scoop came about—well, no one but Senator Morgan, perhaps, for he, being related, as you remember, to Tom Harding's wife's mother, sent the bride for a wedding present a very pretty diamond star and a note, in which he made much jocular use of the word, suggesting, among other things, that he believed she was certainly getting a "star" husband.

The Smallpox Germ.
"One reason why the smallpox germ is so hard to conquer is that he can assume so many different forms," says C. F. Scott in Ainslee's. "He can transform himself from Dr. Jekyll into Mr. Hyde and into two other distinct persons at will. One can never tell which metamorphosis he may assume. As Mr. Hyde, he is known to the medical profession as hemorrhagic, a murderous, deadly fellow that covers his antagonist with wounds that bleed so copiously the afflicted one rarely survives more than a few hours, or, at most, a few days. In one of his other characters he bears the name of Confluent, as which he raises poisonous welts on the skin of the victim very thickly, and they have a tendency to coalesce. In this character he inflicts wounds more painful, but less fatal. The Discrete type manifests himself in fewer papules and is less vigorous in his assaults. The Varioloid is the gentlemanly Dr. Jekyll held in check by vaccination, and although there is no mistaking his identity he is mild mannered and well disposed to the sufferer. A victim may be exposed to the hemorrhagic type and yet the disease which develops in his own system may be any of the other varieties, and similarly through all the combinations. In which form the disease will make its appearance can never be predicted with certainty."

Every Man Has His Master.
No man is completely free. Every man has his master. The supremest despot is a thrall, for there is somebody whom he fears and must court. If he does not dread the plebs, he dreads the patricians; if he is not afraid of the people, he is afraid of the army with which he crows the people; if there is danger in neither the rabble nor the pretorian guard, there is a minister, a major domo, a foreign nation, a jester, a satirist, a dynamiter or a woman who worries and frightens him and in a measure controls his actions.
Put two human beings together, and each will acquire mastery in some respect over the other. The human race is a social body. Men are interdependent. Absolute freedom and splendid isolation are alike impossible. Every one must obey orders or suffer.—San Francisco Bulletin.

The Wind Did It.
"I happened to be in a Wyoming town when a city lot was put up at auction," said a Boston drummer, "and in a spirit of fun I made a bid or two. It was knocked down to me at $40, and I was wondering if anybody would take it off my hands at half that when the city marshal called on me and said: 'Look here, pard, I want to lease your lot by the head.'"
"What do you mean by head?" I asked.

"Well, it's the only lot in town with a tree on it, and I want to use that tree when there's a hanging to be done. I'll give you $5 every time I use it."

"And about what sum can you guarantee?"

"Oh, it will run $50 or $60 a year anyhow, but if times are good it'll go $80 or $90."

"I closed with him," said the drummer, "and in six months my income was $55. Then, not hearing anything further, I wrote to the marshal, and in reply he said:

"Sorry to inform you that your old tree has blown down and that we now have to walk a man a mile to hang him."

THE town hall always has a crowd to hear my Uncle Jim;
There ain't nobody in the state That talks as well as him.
But when he run for office once I had to mourn his lot;

The man who beat him was a chap Of ordinary mind;
He wa'n't particularly wise Nor specially refined.
And all he said was, "Howdy do!" In accents mild and bland,
And all the work he ever did Was shakin' some one's hand.

The voters said they'd tried to help The weak and not the strong;
A man as smart as Uncle Jim Was sure to get along.

P-NEFUL STATISTICS.

French Infant Mortality Caused by Bad and Adulterated Milk—M. Gaston Leroux's Article in Explanation.

M. Gaston Leroux publishes in the Matin an article on the infant mortality caused by bad and adulterated milk. He quotes statistics of a most painful nature, which would seem to demonstrate beyond doubt, that an enormous percentage of the children who die annually in France are literally poisoned by bad milk. This article is illustrated by a map of France, in which the greater or less infant mortality from that cause is indicated by small or large black spots. A glance at it shows that France may be divided into two regions, one to the north of the Loire, where more than half the children who die succumb to gastritis, whereas to the south of the Loire not more than one-third die from that disease. At Troyes the percentage of the infants carried off by gastric diseases is 69, at Mans it is 63, at Rennes 64, at Boulogne-sur-Mer 49, at Amiens 62, at Lille 56, at Paris 36. In the south of France the comparatively few deaths of infants from that disease is most striking. At Toulouse it is 31 per cent. of the total infantile mortality, at Beziers 12 per cent., and at Clermont only 6 per cent.

Explaining the phenomenon of the high rate of infant mortality from gastritis to the north of the Loire compared to that in the south of France, M. Gaston Leroux says it is due to the adulteration in the north of the country, where the making of butter is a great industry, whereas very little butter is made in the south. He explains that it is, moreover, now completely established that to feed children even on unadulterated cream is a dangerous and guilty practice, in connection with the dangers attending the consumption of milk, not only by infants, but by adult persons. It is interesting to note the following lines contained in "Les Principes de l'aliterie," written by Dr. Duclaux, director of the Pasteur Institute:

"Numerous experiments have shown that milk of cows suffering from tuberculosis contains bacilli of tuberculosis, not only when the udder is contaminated with tuberculosis, but when it is in reality healthy and the disease elsewhere. It can be affirmed to-day that numerous persons suffering from tuberculosis owe their disease to milk and that to avoid the danger of infection, which is much greater than might be supposed, it is necessary to cease drinking unboiled milk."—London Standard's Paris Correspondent.

Violets

By HELEN WOOD

Copyright, 1901, by Helen Wood

Edith Dean entered her Aunt Marcy's room with a great bunch of violets on her jacket. They filled the room with their perfume and seemed the spirit of their wearer, a slender girl with deep blue eyes and a pretty, pensive way of carrying her head. Mrs. Murray greeted her niece affectionately. They were strikingly alike—the same eyes, lips and wavy hair and the same quick, nervous way of speaking.

"How beautiful your violets are!" "Oh, yes," replied the girl carelessly. "Jimmy always sends me lovely flowers, but I'm getting so tired of violets. I don't see why he didn't get American Beauties instead today."

She tossed her coat carelessly on the couch, crumpling and crushing the violets. Her aunt looked up quickly and then drew the girl to the stool at her side.

"Edith, your words remind me of a story. May I tell it?"

The girl nodded her head delightedly. "It was in the spring of 1801. I was a gay, spoiled girl, like you, and Langdon Murray, to whom I had been engaged for several months, was my helpless slave. While our social pleasures differed slightly from those of the present day we, too, loved pretty gowns and flowers, so when Langdon promised to send me, for a certain dance, the prettiest flowers he could find I naturally expected something quite handsome in the way of a bouquet. Instead of the roses I had hoped for there came only a bunch of violets, not violets de Parma, like yours, but the simplest of fragrant blossoms. I was in a fine temper, tossed them aside and went to the dance unadorned with any flowers. If Langdon felt hurt, he showed no sign, and his very self restraint annoyed me the more. I was disgracefully pettish all evening and on the way home had little to say to my long suffering escort.

"The next evening he called as usual, and in the meantime mother had rescued the discarded violets and placed them in a vase. He crossed to the piano and touched the half faded flowers whimsically. Then he turned to me with unusual gravity and tenderness.

"So you didn't like my violets, Marcy, dear?"

"Childishly I shook my head.

"I thought, dearest, they were the reflection of your eyes. That's why I with white ribbon.

"You of today cannot realize the horrors of the civil war. Mother and I sewed incessantly for the soldiers. It was all we could do. This labor of love, with frequent letters from Langdon, who was with the western army, kept me alive. Separation had taught me how deep was my love for him.

"After the battle of Stony Ridge came word that Langdon had been terribly wounded and left on the field until aid could be sent to him, but when the hospital corps arrived he was not to be found, and the messmate who wrote the letter had been able to learn nothing of his fate, nor could the inquiries instituted by my father solve the mystery. I raved at fate. I prayed to die. If only I could visit his grave, know where he was sleeping with my violets over his heart, as he had said they should always lie.

"The weeks dragged into months, and then suddenly came news from Nashville that he lay there in the government hospital, with other Federal prisoners he had been recently exchanged, and if I wished to see him alive I must come at once. Of the horrors of that trip and the days among the suffering and dying you can never know, but I nursed Langdon back to life, and when we reached our northern home it was a more sensible, thoughtful woman that he led to the altar, and, my dear, in the first few years of our married life whenever the old thoughtless words rose to my lips I recalled the violets which he had worn over his heart through the battles and the marches, and whenever I became selfish and thought my husband was not doing everything he could to make me happy I would steal away to my room and look into the pages where these withered flowers lay. Violets may be modest, but they can recall memories which no haughty American Beauties can boast."

Edith was very thoughtful as she kissed her aunt and went to her room. There on her tea table the maid had placed a vase filled with American Beauties. She flushed as she looked at them. What had she said to Jimmy about hating violets?

That evening when Jim Barber called on his fiancée Edith was wearing the violets. He elevated his eyebrows slightly, then bent down to kiss the tender, upturned face. Edith was looking unusually pensive.

"I thought you hated violets. Didn't you get the roses this afternoon?" Edith smiled.

"I won't fib, Jimmy. I do like roses best, but when you send the violets—why—why, that makes them different, you know."

Jim, rather surprised at the sudden tenderness and gentleness of his whimsical sweetheart, held her close to his heart. At last he raised her head and, pulling some violets from her corsage, fastened them on his coat. Again he stooped to kiss her hands as she whispered:

"You don't think, Jimmy, that there's going to be a war—very soon?" Jimmy, who belonged to the national guard, glanced at her curiously.

"No, dear."

She sighed happily and murmured, "I'm very, very glad."

Fourth Century Shorthand.

That shorthand was used in the ancient world is well known, but our information is still scanty, and any addition is welcome. It may therefore be worth knowing that there is in the Armenian "Acts of St. Callistratus" a reference to the employment of stenography. A translation of this is included in Mr. F. C. Conybeare's "Armenian Apology and Acts of Apollonius and Other Monuments of Early Christianity." The account of Callistratus was probably written in the first half of the fourth century. It includes several long addresses of Callistratus to his fellow soldiers in explanation of the mysteries of the new faith for which he and forty-nine of his comrades became martyrs. Perhaps with a view to giving them authority as verbatim reports, the compiler says:

"But there was a certain scribe of the law court who was near to the prison, and he listened to the discourse of Callistratus, and he wrote it down in shorthand on paper and gave it to us, and we set in order with all accuracy the record and outline of his thought."

Thackeray's Facial Appearance.

In 1849 or 1850 Charlotte Bronte wrote of Thackeray: "To me the broad brow seems to express intellect. Certain lines about the nose and cheek betray the satirist and the cynic; the mouth indicates a childlike simplicity, perhaps even a degree of irresoluteness in consistency—weakness, in short, but a weakness not unamiable." And Mr. Motley, writing to his wife in 1858, said: "I believe you have never seen Thackeray. He has the appearance of a colossal infant—smooth, white, shining, ringlety hair, duxen, alas, with advancing years; a roundish face with a little dab of a nose, upon which it is a perpetual wonder how he keeps his spectacles."

This broken nose was always a source of amusement to Thackeray himself. He caricatured it in his drawing, he frequently alluded to it in his speech and in his letters, and he was fond of repeating Douglas Jerrold's remark to him when he was to stand as godfather to a friend's son, "Lord, Thackeray, I hope you won't present the child with your own mug!"

A Tender Hearted Dog.

A sick dog took up his abode in the field behind our house, and after seeing the poor thing lying there for some time I took it food and milk and water. The next day it was still there, and when I was going out to feed it I saw that a small pug was running about it, so I took a whip out with me to drive it away. The pug planted itself between me and the sick dog and barked at me savagely, but at last I drove it away and again gave food and milk and water to my protegee.

The little pug watched me for a few moments, and as soon as he felt quite assured that my intentions toward the sick dog were friendly it ran to me wagging its tail, leaped up to my shoulder and licked my face and hands, nor would it touch the water till the invalid had had all it wanted. I suppose that it was satisfied that its companion was in good hands, for it trotted happily away and did not appear upon the scene again.—Cor. London Spectator

His "Waterloo Breaches."

The first Duke of Wellington once received a letter from C. J. London, a horticulturist, asking permission to see the Waterloo breaches at Statheldaye. Mistaking the signature for "C. J. Ways of a Professional Beggar.

M. de Bhowitz in the Paris Martin tells an amusing story of how a sinner rises to the "encyclopaedia Britannica" need to work. He was a professional writer of begging letters, and in them he represented himself to be now one sort of a person and then another, "getting up" from the pages of his encyclopaedia the necessary historical knowledge to give his letters plausibility. Thus, he explained, that having written a letter in which he was a potter who had been chemically poisoned and unwittingly for work, he used the encyclopaedia for details of his pottery trade, of which he himself was entirely ignorant. The one word, "kaolin" which he used in his letters, and the explanation of its use in the material made every one believe in the genuineness of his account and brought him a perfect harvest of pennies and postal money orders.

WAS PRE-VICTORIAN

LATE PHILIP JAMES BAILEY BELONGED TO A FORMER AGE.

Passing of the Famous English Poet, Author of "Festus"—Poem, Published in 1839, Was Regarded by Lytton, Tennyson, Thackeray and Others as One of the Great Poems of All Time.

Philip James Bailey, the noted poet, author of the classic poem "Festus," which was published in 1839 and which was regarded by Lytton, Tennyson, Thackeray and others as one of the great poems of all time, died at his home in Nottingham, aged 86 years, on the 6th September, 1902.

Mr. Bailey belonged to a pre-Victorian age, and there were few persons in England but believed that he had long since passed away. The poet put all the genius of a lifetime into his one work, polishing the lines, changing the conceptions here and there, and adding voluminously to the text up to a comparatively few years ago. In 1899 a jubilee of the publication was celebrated, and the jubilee edition, considerably expanded, presents the poem in its ultimate form.

"Festus" appeared in 1839. It was published anonymously at first, and its unknown author was hailed by the best English critics as the fellow of Milton and Goethe. Tennyson said of it: "I can scarcely trust myself to say how much I admire it, for fear of falling into extravagance." The poem ran through numerous editions rapidly. In 1889 eleven editions had appeared in England, and in 1877 thirty editions had already been published in the United States. Bailey was born at Nottingham in 1816. His father was an editor, who sent his brilliant son to Glasgow for an education, but he left the university without a degree to take up the law. He soon abandoned his studies, however, for poetry. For a long time he lived in Jersey, but in 1835 he removed to England, and in 1839 to his birthplace to spend his old age. He retained his clarity of mind in a remarkable degree, but was singularly retiring and diffident—a trait which accounted for the fact that he was so little known personally to the public. His wife died in 1856.

British Trades Union Discipline.

The story of a Spanish Princess being allowed to burn to death in the presence of her attendants because for them to have touched her would have been a breach of etiquette is generally regarded as the example, par excellence, of old-time folly, but a recent example of trade union methods would appear to run it closer. A workman, engaged in guiding a cable into a coil, got his fingers caught between the cable and the coil. The men at the other end continued to pull, being unaware of the mishap, but an apprentice seeing the serious state of affairs, rushed up and pulled back the cable. A delegate of the union having witnessed the affair, reported the workman for having broken the rules of the order. The injured man had to go before the executive to explain his conduct, and although his damaged hand was a strong witness in his defence, he was fined for allowing an apprentice to do his work—to wit, assisting a journeyman drawing wire into a coil. Discipline is all very well in its way, but with such master minds at work one need not wonder that we suffer so much from intelligent competition.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Got a Better Place.

Daniel O'Connell once told the House of Commons an amusing story of bribery. A farmer in the County of Wexford was promised a position for his son in return for his vote for a member of the Loftus family. The father's ambition for the boy aimed at a sergeantcy in the artillery, but Lord Loftus, on applying for this post for the youth, was informed that it was totally impossible to grant his request, inasmuch as it required a previous service of six years to qualify a candidate for the position. "Does it require six years to qualify him for a lieutenantcy?" demanded Lord Loftus. "Certainly not," was the answer. "Well, can't you make him a lieutenant, then?" rejoined Lord Loftus. "Whereupon," said O'Connell, "the fellow was made a lieutenant, for no better reason than just because he was not fit to be a sergeant."

MAN AND HORSE.

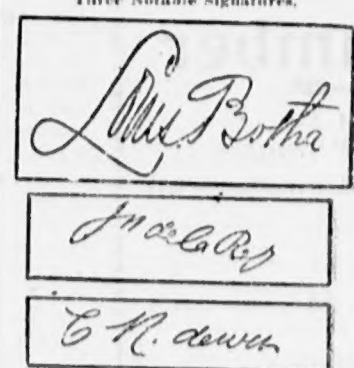

Some Remarkable Cases of Endurance on the Part of Both—Military Ride From Brussels to Ostend.

There is a very general discussion going on in the European press regarding the unnecessary cruelty to horses attending the military ride from Brussels to Ostend, which recently brought together contestants from most of the European armies. The London Chronicle gives some remarkable cases of endurance on the part of both men and horses. Charles XII. of Sweden rode from Remstien in Turkey to Stralsund on the Baltic, a distance of 1,600 miles in a fortnight, during which he thus kept up the pace at the tremendous rate of 100 miles a day. Nearest akin, perhaps, to this relay riding by Charles Douce are the "pony express" performances of Captain Cody, better known as "Buffalo Bill," who once covered an "extra distance" of 322 miles in one continuous ride at an average speed of fifteen miles an hour; while from Fort McHenry to Fort Ramsey—a distance of 95 miles—he rode in twelve hours one day, and did the return ride the next day in the same time on the same horse.

In the annals of English history there is the record of a fine performance. This was the feat of Sir Robert Cary—afterwards Earl of Monmouth—who had private reasons of his own for being the first to announce to James VI. of Scotland the death of Queen Elizabeth, to whose throne the "British Solomon" was called to succeed. From London to Edinburgh the distance is now 400 miles, and at that time it may be said to have been even more, by reason of the wretchedness of the roads. Starting from Charing Cross on a Thursday morning (March 21, 1603), Sir Robert reached Holyrood on the following Saturday night. The first day he rode to Doncaster, 155 miles (presumably on relay horses); next night he slept at a house of his own in Witherington, in Northumberland, about 130 miles further, and on the evening of the following day he reached Holyrood, covered with blood from a fall on his horse in the last section of his tremendous ride. Thus Sir Robert—who spent two nights in bed—had done an average of about 133 miles a day for three successive days—a splendid instance of personal endurance.

Captain Charles Townley, a Queen's foreign service messenger in 1849, was sent to Constantinople by Lord Palmerston with despatches of momentous urgency and importance. The captain could get no further than Belgrade, by rail, and thence it behooved him to spur across the Balkans to Stambul—a distance of 820 miles. Every moment was precious. His orders were "not to spare himself nor others." He did neither. His way lay through mud, mountains and darkness. An old musket wound opened in his wild career, and drenched him with blood, and he repeatedly fainted in the saddle. Twice his horse fell with him. Thirty minutes to change horses was all the rest he took—apart from one "blessed sleep of six hours," and so, after five days and eleven hours in the saddle, he rode, or rather reeled, into the courtyard of the British embassy at Pera, after having covered an average distance of 150 miles a day for five and a half days—a finer case of personal endurance even than that of Sir Robert Cary, who had done his average 133 miles per diem for three days. The "voice of honor and humanity" had been vindicated, as Canning wrote—nor would anyone have protested, if, in such a case, a hundred horses had been killed, and Townley's great ride of 820 miles in 131 hours was recited in the House of Commons to the pride and wonder of all Englishmen.

The... SPELLING SCHOOL

By C. B. Lewis

Copyright, 1902, by the
S. S. McClure Company

When the school board of district No. 5, which included the hamlet of Beebe's Corners, announced that they had engaged a schoolma'am for the winter term instead of a schoolmaster, there was much wondering among the farmhouses as to how she would manage things. For three successive winters the schoolmaster had been thrashed by a gang of bad boys, led by hulking Joe Whitman, and folks predicted that the new teacher would be picked up, carried out and dropped into a snowdrift the first day.

Seth Thomas, a young farmer, drove over to the railroad station to meet Miss Baker when her school was ready to open, and his surprise was reflected on all sides. She was a slip of a girl, less than twenty years old and shy, and this was her first school. She had taken it because her mother was an invalid and her father had failed in business, but that came out afterward. That a good looking, refined young woman like Miss Baker should take a country school at $25 a month instead of getting married was a mystery no one could solve.

Seth Thomas was twenty-three years old, and he also was shy. During the three mile drive the pair did not exchange a hundred words. Seth was awed and scared by the girl's good looks, and she was frightened at coming among strangers. She was driven to the Carsons', where she was to board, and she saw no more of Seth for a fortnight. Her only remembrance of him was that he had a plain, good natured face and a pleasant voice.

During this fortnight Bob Graham walked home with her from school on several occasions. Jim Taylor made two calls at the Carsons', Tom Lane drove her to school one stormy morning, and Charley Saunders, acknowledged the most stylish young farmer for five miles around, escorted her to evening church services and home again. Her school had started off bravely, and she had no idea that it was all owing to the bashful Seth. He had been afraid to call on her, but he wasn't afraid to meet Joe Whitman and his crowd the day before school opened and to say to them:

"Look here, now. You boys have got to behave yourselves this winter.

HE HAD JUST STARTED FOR THE DOOR WITH HER IN HIS ARMS

If you give that little schoolma'am one bit of trouble, I'll thrash every one of you till you can't crawl home!"

There was a difference of opinion until Seth had picked each up separately, shaken most of the devilry out of him and then driven him head first into a snowdrift. That settled the question of mutiny. Later on, when he had worked up the courage to call on the new teacher, she was lying down with a headache and asked to be excused. Two weeks later, when he called again, she happened to be out. Seth did not try again. He got the idea that she didn't care to see him, and, though willing to acknowledge to himself that he was homely, angular and awkward, it hurt him that she should think so. She must think so, of course, as she was always "at home" to other young men, and they lost no opportunity of boasting of how flatteringly they were received.

Six weeks after school opened Seth was driving past the schoolhouse one day when the sounds of a disturbance reached his ears. Joe Whitman had forgotten his shaking up and decided to break loose. That meant carrying Miss Baker outdoors and ducking her in a snowdrift, but there was a loose wheel in the programme. He had just started for the door with her in his arms when Seth Thomas walked in. First, it was Joe who found the

The schoolma'am would have taken Seth by the hand and thanked him, but when he had concluded the performance he drove away without a look toward the schoolhouse. Then the girl's intuition told her that the awkward Seth was an admirer who felt himself snubbed, and for the next four weeks she hoped he might call on her or that they might meet elsewhere and have an explanation. He avoided her, however, though, if he had but known it, she gave more thought to him than to all the others.

There was always a midwinter spelling school at the Corners. Teacher and pupils of other schools were invited, and the victor of the contest was regarded as the smartest thing on earth. At the spelling school the year before the championship had been wrested from No. 5 by No. 6, and the schoolmaster of the latter district had his salary raised $3 per month. This fact invested the coming contest with more than usual excitement.

A day or two before the contest Miss Baker learned that Seth lived just over the line in district No. 6. He would therefore be an opponent, and, no matter how deficient he was in other branches, he was accounted a prodigy in orthography.

"He feels that I have snubbed him, and he is now going to have revenge on me. I wish he only knew how sorry I am."

The schoolhouse was jammed with teachers, pupils and parents, and all recognized the fact that it was No. 5 versus No. 6. The teacher of No. 6 was a young man, but he was there to win if he could, and so were his best spellers. Queerly enough, it came about that Miss Baker and Seth Thomas headed the opposition lists, and they were opposite each other as Squire Jameson took the spelling book and gave out the first word. Things went easy at first, but when he came to the four syllable words the ranks began to thin. Fifteen minutes later there were only five on a side. Ten minutes more and only six in all were standing, four of whom were No. 6's. Then the word "separate" knocked down two of the latter, and the contest went on for a few minutes with two on a side. Then came the word "impecuniosity," and Miss Baker and Seth Thomas were alone on the floor. There were yelling and cheering, followed by silence, as the squire looked for the hardest words.

"I shall be beaten," sighed the schoolma'am, "and the whole district will be humiliated. If it were anybody but Seth, who thinks I meant to snub him, I wouldn't care so much. I wish—I wish—"

"We will now resume," interrupted the squire, and with solemn deliberation he gave out a score of big words in succession. In time he must reach the word "epidemiological." Miss Baker knew it was there, and she knew she always blundered over it, and if it came to her the championship was gone. It came to Seth, however, and for the first time he raised his eyes from the floor and looked into hers. She did not read revenge there, but self sacrifice. An instant later, with the audience holding its breath, he began on the word and at the fifth division of it put in an "a" for the "o" with such emphasis as to give her the cue, and as he sat down she spelled the word right, at which the champions of No. 5 almost lifted the roof with their yells. An hour later as he walked up the road to the Carsons beside her she asked:

"But why did you do it? I am sure you misspelled the word on purpose."

"I—I guess it was for love," replied Seth as he turned his head away and stubbed his toes into the snow.

Neither Fear Nor Favor.

A tactful refusal is sometimes hard to compass; yet a "no" may contain a spicier savor than many an assent. There is a story of Archbishop Whately, who was walking in a London city park one day with a curate and Charles Lever, the novelist.

The archbishop was greatly interested in mushrooms, and he picked one and ate a piece of it, at the same time handing a bit to the curate.

"What do you think of that, Mr. A.?" he asked.

The curate did not especially like it, and moreover he was not sure whether it could be safely eaten. Nevertheless, this was his superior in office, a man who must not be offended.

"I think, my lord," said he, obsequiously, "if it had a little pepper and salt it would be delicious."

"Here, Lever," said the archbishop, "you taste it and see what you think of it."

"Many thanks, your grace," said Lever, calmly, "but I am not a clergyman. It is true that I have a brother in holy orders, but he is not in your grace's diocese."

The archbishop laughed, better pleased with this cleverness of evasion than by a dull acquiescence, and ate the mushroom himself.

HOW RELIEF CAME.

An Interesting Story From An Icelandic Settlement.

From the Logberg, Winnipeg, Man.

The readers of Logberg have long been familiar with the virtues of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through the well authenticated cures published in these columns each week. Many of our readers are also able to vouch for cures which have come under their own observation. This week "Logberg" has received a letter from one of its readers, Mr. B. Watterson, a prosperous farmer living at Bru, in which he gives his own experience in the hope that it may benefit some other sufferer. Mr. Watterson says: "Some years ago I was suffering so greatly from rheumatism in my limbs that I was for a long time unable to do any work. I tried in many ways to obtain a cure, both by patent medicines and medicine prescribed by doctors, but without obtaining any benefit. I saw Dr. Williams' Pink Pills advertised in the Logberg as being a cure for this trouble and determined to give it a trial. I bought a dozen boxes and before half of them were used I felt a great change for the better. This improvement continued from day to day, and before I had used all the pills I was completely cured. Since that time I have never had an attack of this trouble. After this I used the pills in several other cases and no other medicine has been so beneficial to me. I feel it my duty to publicly give testimony to the merits of this wonderful medicine so others similarly afflicted may be led to try it."

If you are weak or ailing; if your nerves are tired and jaded, or your blood is out of condition, you will be wise to use Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which are an unfailing cure for all blood and nerve troubles. But be sure you get the genuine, with the full name "Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People" on the wrapper around every box. Sold by all medicine dealers or sent post paid at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing direct to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Sometimes in our more tolerant and forgiving moods, we don't blame people for what they do; at the same time we cannot help but feel that they ought to have had more sense.

LEARNING A LANGUAGE.

It is Comparatively Easy to Acquire a Working Vocabulary.

"It doesn't require any great length of time to learn a language if one has patience," said a man who has mastered several languages, "and when I hear a man regret that he is not able to speak French or German or Spanish or some other language unknown to him I cannot conceal my amusement. In nine cases out of ten I might say that the men who express a regret of this sort handle English very poorly if that happens to be their language."

"The chances are that their vocabularies are extremely limited, and it would probably surprise them to know that despite the advantages of birth and education they could not command more than 600 or 700 words in English if their lives depended upon it. Yet they are able to carry on intelligent conversation, and many of them may become forcible and even axiomatic in their sayings, and they plunge into discussions of literature, art, music and other subjects of such fine elegance and do it rather successfully too."

"Now, how long ought it to take for a man to learn 600 or 700 or even 1,000 words in any language? Certainly it ought not to take any great length of time, and from my own experience I know that it does not. Of course I am not speaking now of mastering so that one can get the full benefit of all the refinements of speech in a particular tongue."

"But I have in mind the idea of speaking intelligibly in a given language and being able to understand perfectly what is said in return. I have a system which I have worked out, and it has been of vast benefit to me and has enabled me to learn a number of languages. It occurred to me while I was in Mexico a few years ago on important business."

"I could not speak a word of Spanish and could not understand the language. I concluded that I would learn the language. My plan was simply this: I made up my mind that I would not retire at the close of any day as long as I was there without learning at least three words in Spanish, how to pronounce them and what they meant. That would give me ninety words per month, or something over 1,000 in a year's time."

Look Out For Your Pate.

A contemporary says "pate" is slang for head. It is, eh? Wherefore? Surely the word is used in a trivial or derogatory sense, as noddle, noggin, cranium, brainpan, etc., but its origin is eminently respectable. Shakespeare says "the learned pate ducks to the golden fool." Pope's epigram is good: You beat your pate and fancy wit will come; Knock as you please, there's nobody at home.

We have "bald pate" and "shave pate." Why, the word is used once in the Bible, and by David, in Psalm vii. 16, "His mischief shall return upon his own head, and his violent dealing shall come down upon his own pate." Accurately, pate does not mean the head, but the crown of the head.

A Forbidden Topic.

"There is one topic peremptorily forbidden to all well bred, to all rational, mortals," says Emerson, "namely, their distempers. If you have not slept or if you have slept or if you have headache or sciatica or leprosy or thunderstroke, I beseech you by all angels to hold your peace and not pollute the morning, to which all the housemates bring serene and pleasant thoughts, by corruption and groans. Come out of the azure. Love the day."

The quotation suggests that, hard as it is to be an invalid, it may prove almost as painful to be an invalid's friend.

Love and Business.

"Dear," she said during an interval of comparative sanity, "promise me one thing."

"Anything," he answered, with the recklessness of love.

"After we have been married a reasonable time if we decide a divorce is desirable promise that my brothers, who are struggling young lawyers, shall represent us."

Open Road to Fame and Fortune.

"My boy," said the old gentleman in a kindly tone, "there's only one thing that stands between you and success." "And what is that?" asked the youth. "If you worked as hard at working," explained the old gentleman, "as you do at trying to find some way to avoid working, you would easily acquire both fame and fortune."

The One Qualification.

"What position will our friend take on this momentous question?" asked the gradiloquent man.

"Position?" echoed Senator Sorghum absentmindedly. "Oh, he'll take pretty nearly any position that's open, provided there's salary attached to it."

Nurses' Experience.

Medical men say that a good nurse in a difficult case is better than medicine, but when we can get a good nurse and good medicine, the patient stands a much better chance of recovery. The few words of advice given below by nurse Eliza King, are well worthy the attention of all readers:

"I have constantly used St. Jacobs Oil in the various situations I have occupied as nurse, and have invariably found it excellent in all cases requiring outward application, such as sprains, bruises, rheumatic affections, neuralgia, etc. In cases of pleurisy it is an excellent remedy—well rubbed I can strongly recommend it after several years' use and experience. It should be in every household."

Sister Carolina, St. Andrew's Hospital, writes: "I have found St. Jacobs Oil a most efficacious remedy in gout; also in sprains and bruises. Indeed, we cannot say too much in its praise, and our doctor is ordering it constantly."

A piece of property at the southwest corner of Twelfth and Market streets in Philadelphia was sold recently for $500,000. The lot had a frontage of 45 feet 9 inches on Market street, with a depth of 112. This makes the rate per foot about $11,000.

If attacked with cholera or summer complaint of any kind send at once for a bottle of Dr. J. D. Kellogg's Dysentery, Cholera, and use it according to directions. It acts with wonderful rapidity in subduing that dreadful disease that weakens the strongest man and that destroys the young and delicate. Those who have used this cholera medicine say it acts promptly and never fails to effect a thorough cure.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed for ever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

AN UNQUIET SPIRIT.

The Mysterious Light That For Years Haunted Cape Noir.

For many years on Cape Noir, the western point of Maria, a strange light was seen, dancing and moving about in the most unaccountable manner. At one moment it would rise like a column of fire into the air, and at another time it would fall like a meteor. Then it would seem to leap over the point and drop into the sea, afterward appearing again in the same spot on the hillside. The habitants tell this story about it:

In the time of the war for the possession of Canada a French vessel, pursued by an English warship, steered its course into the bay at this point for refuge. A boat was lowered from the side of the richly laden merchantman, and in this thirteen men swiftly rowed to the shore. Their object was to secrete a chest of gold which they had brought with them. On reaching the point they drew lots to see which of the men should remain to guard the treasure. The one to whom the lot fell was forced to swear a solemn oath, by land and sea, by night and day, by the ruler of the nether world, that he would be faithful to the trust through life, unless relieved by his returning comrades, and even after death would haunt the spot should no one come to take his place, says a writer in the Era.

To secure the fulfillment of this vow his wicked associates then and there put him to death and buried him with the treasure. The ghostly light was supposed to be the spirit of the murdered man, and many persons who, tempted by the hope of recovering the treasure, ventured into the haunted spot fled in terror and told blood curdling stories of the horrible phantoms and frightful sights which they had witnessed. The light is seen no longer. Perhaps some adventurer bolder than the rest succeeded in discovering the gold, carried it off and thus gave rest to the unquiet spirit.

TO CURE CORNS.

A Few Remedies, Cheap and Simple, and Involving No Danger.

When the feet are pressed into tight fitting shoes—high heels make the pressure greater—by adding friction we have a needlelike point formed in the skin, and the greater the pressure the deeper the point will grow. The best preventive remedy known is really to go barefooted, but since this is not considered ethical in civilized life I will give a few simple remedies which may be of some value for the afflicted:

First.—Place on the corn a piece of cold, moist linen folded several times, wrap it up in dry linen, then go to bed. With this treatment the hard epidermis swells up, and after six or eight hours the outer covering of the corn can be removed with a dull knife. When this treatment has been followed for three or four days, a small needlelike growth (the corn) can be extracted without pain or bleeding. By washing the feet often in cold water the tender place will heal rapidly. After getting rid of this corn it is well to wear shoes which are neither too large nor too small so as to avoid excessive pressure or friction.

Second.—In place of the linen a crust of bread soaked in vinegar may be applied.

Third.—The best application is to soak a whole onion twenty-four hours in vinegar, then apply one of the layers of the onion to the corn and keep it in place by a bandage through the night. After repeating this procedure a few times the corn can be removed without any trouble. By either of these simple applications this troublesome agent can be removed without any danger of blood poison and "free of charge."

Refractive Power of the Ruby.

The primitive form of the spinel ruby is like that of the diamond, eight sided, which distinguishes it at once from the oriental stone. The color of the genuine ruby is that of the arterial blood, or pigeon's blood, as it is called. It is extremely hard and after the sapphires is the hardest of the corundums, which renders it difficult to understand why the earth so rarely gives it up. Its tint is as beautiful by artificial light as by day, and its powers of reflection are so great that ancient belief credited it with power of emitting light. The ancients even supposed that it would shine through clothing with undiminished power.

The German Wife's Vacation.

It is a common practice in Berlin for the wife to stay at home when the husband and family go to the seaside. In this way the wife enjoys her own holiday, for there is no housekeeping to be done. She foregoes with friends—"grass widows," like herself—and they take their meals at restaurants, spend their afternoons and evenings at popular places of entertainment and thoroughly enjoy themselves.

Japan and Music.

Japan has no music, and the first melodies many of the race ever heard aside from that of the birds were hymns sung by Christian missionaries. Notwithstanding this many Japanese have of late years become expert musicians and charming vocalists.

"WELL, THANK YOU."

A Granton Man is now Able to Make this Answer.

Inquiring Friends did not always get such a Cheery Reply because for Many Years Mr. Fletcher Suffered with Lumbago.

Granton, Ont., Oct. 12. (Special).—Mr. John Fletcher, a well-known farmer of this place who suffered for a long time with Lumbago and Kidney Trouble, has at last found a cure.

Now, when his friends inquire as to his health, he cheerfully tells them that he is well, something which he has not been able to do for a long time, till quite recently.

Mr. Fletcher tells the story of his illness and how he was cured, as follows:

"I was troubled for a long time with Lumbago and Kidney Trouble. My urine was of a very red color. I tried many medicines but could get nothing to help me.

"I consulted the best medical doctors in Granton and St. Mary's, but they could do nothing for me.

"At last one day a druggist in Granton suggested Dodd's Kidney Pills as a cure for my Lumbago. I purchased a box and began to take them right away. The first box helped me and I kept on till at last I was completely cured.

"I am now as well as ever I was and have not any trace of Lumbago about me. I am perfectly sound and I thank Dodd's Kidney Pills for it.

"I recommend them to all my friends, and as for myself I never intend that my house shall be without them, for I believe them to be the greatest medicine in the world."

Mr. Fletcher is a man who means every word he says, and is prepared to substantiate the truth of every statement made above.

There seems to be no case of Lumbago, Backache, Kidney Trouble, or Rheumatism that Dodd's Kidney Pills will not cure.

"No; she's no better," said a woman when the doctor came to visit her husband. "You told me to give him as much of the powder as would lay on a ten-cent piece. I hadn't a ten, but I have him as much as would go on ten ones, and he's worse, if anything."

THE MODERN MOTHER.

Has Ways of Caring for Baby That Our Grandmothers Never Knew.

Many almost sacred traditions of the nursery have been cast aside by the up-to-date mother. Even the one essential cradle is now seldom found in the house blessed by Baby's presence. The modern baby is not fed every time he cries, but when the clock announces the proper time. The doctor approves of this, and baby is better for it, but despite regular hours of feeding, nearly all the disorders of infants are caused by derangement of the stomach and bowels. Mothers' greatest problem is a treatment of these ills that will be gentle but effective, and, above all, safe. Mrs. J. W. Bailey, of Head Lake, Ont., writes from the fullness of experience when she says: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets for my six months old baby who was troubled with indigestion. The results were beyond my expectations. Words cannot convey to those who have not tried them the worth of these Tablets. I will never again use any other preparation for the baby, as I am convinced there is nothing so good as Baby's Own Tablets."

These Tablets are a gentle laxative and comforting medicine for infants and children. They are pleasant to take and are guaranteed to contain no opiate. If your druggist does not keep Baby's Own Tablets send 45c to the Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont., or Schenectady, N. Y., and a full sized box will be mailed, post paid, to your address.

Polo is probably the oldest of athletic sports. It has been traced to 600 B.C.

Chronic Derangements of the Stomach, Liver and Blood are speedily removed by the active principle of the ingredients entering into the composition of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills. These pills act specifically on the deranged organs, stimulating to action the dormant energies of the system, thereby removing disease and renewing life and vitality to the afflicted. In this lies the great secret of the popularity of Parmelee's Vegetable Pills.

The Japanese eat more fish than any other people in the world. With them meat is a foreign innovation, confined to the rich, or, rather, to those rich people who prefer it to the national diet.

No Danger.

Prof. W. Hodgson Ellis, Official Analyst to the Dominion Government, has proved by analysis that "Sunlight Soap is a pure and well-made soap, and has a thorough cleansing power, without danger to the clothing or skin."

Clothing is worn more in the wash than in use where common soaps are used, and the hands are liable to eczema. Try Sunlight Soap—Octagon Bar—next wash day, and you will see Prof. Ellis is right. No one should know better than he.

There never was and never will be a universal panacea. In one remedy, for all ills to which flesh is heir—the very nature of many curatives being such that were the germs of other and differently seated diseases rooted in the system of the patient—what would relieve one ill in turn would aggravate the other. We have, however, in Quinine Wine, when obtainable in sound, unadulterated state, a remedy for many and grievous ills. By its gradual and judicious use the frailest systems are led into convalescence and strength by the influence which Quinine exerts on nature's own restoratives. It relieves the drooping spirits of those with whom a chronic state of morbid dependency and lack of interest in life is a disease, and by tranquilizing the nerves, disposes to sound and refreshing sleep—imparts vigor to the action of the blood, which, being stimulated, courses through the veins, strengthening the healthy animal functions of the system, thereby making activity a necessary result, strengthening the frame and giving life to the digestive organs, which naturally demand increased substance—result, improved appetite. Northrop & Lyman, of Toronto, have given to the public their Superior Quinine Wine at the usual rate, and, gauged by the opinions of scientists, this wine approaches nearest perfection of any in the market. All druggists sell it.

The Postal Service

must be refused. No means can be provided whereby every one can get everything he asks. But the refusal should be on the ground of lesser need rather than on that of lesser revenue.

Owing to increase of population the Northwest suffers more than any other part of the Dominion from the economical feature of the department's policy, and as population is increasing more rapidly in Alberta than in any other part of the Territories the pinch is felt most severely here. Within the past year or two there has been a very considerable increase in the number of post offices and services in Alberta, it has not by any means kept pace with the actual increase of people. It is not economy to keep large numbers of new settlers without the convenience of a post office one minute longer than circumstances compel. There is nothing which the new settler appreciates more than a good postal service, and none the lack of which will sooner make him dissatisfied with his choice. As already said it would be impossible and improper to grant every application made. But the department has a staff of trusted officials whose business it is to decide on the merits of each application. This article is not written to complain that applications have been refused but that in many cases they have simply not been acted on, no reasons being given; and in other cases have been refused for reasons that were not good. The Alberta liberal association which met in September last in Calgary, while commending the government and endorsing its policy felt called upon to draw attention to the attitude of the post office department towards requirements of the mail service. This would not have been done had the occasion not existed. A few instances may be mentioned.

Some years ago, and at various times a number of post offices were established in the Beaver lake and Vermillion river district and were given a fortnightly mail. The names of the offices are: Ross Creek, Logan, Toftield Northern, Beaver lake and Vegreville. These offices are served by a mail route which starts from Fort Saskatchewan. During the past two seasons the district served by these offices and the country beyond them to the eastward has received a greater influx of new settlers than any other equal area in Manitoba or the Northwest. Consequently the demand for a more frequent, that is for a weekly mail service. So far every effort to secure the increased service has been unavailing although kept up persistently for two years. The reply of the postmaster general is that the revenue received from these offices does not justify the greater expenditure necessary to give them a weekly mail. In the first place that is not a sufficient reason in itself for refusing the increased service. And in the next place the fact that the service is only fortnightly is the chief cause of the small revenue. The greater part of the letters sent and received pass by hand direct to and from Fort Saskatchewan, Edmonton or Wetaskiwin; without waiting for the mail. If the mail were weekly all these letters would go by it and the revenue of the offices be correspondingly increased. And if letters could be sent and received once a week many more would be written both ways. A service once in two weeks is much the same as no service at all in a settlement of any consequence within a hundred miles of the railway.

Another instance is that of the settlers in township 57-28-4 and 1-5. They are chiefly from the States, went in two and three years ago, and their numbers are constantly increasing. They are fifty miles from the railway and twelve from the nearest post office. They petitioned for a post office over a year ago. Never got one, and so far as heard from don't yet know why. This is only one out of many cases in the new settlements, and is the one and practically the only kick the new settlers have against the present administration of the affairs in the West. The lack of mails into the far north is a sore subject with business people here. The trade of the vast Mackenzie river basin centres at Edmonton. That trade amounts less than half a million to a million a year. It divides naturally into two parts, the Peace river and the Mackenzie. The former flows west and the latter due north to Edmonton. To Peace river on Athabasca Landing the distance is 300 miles and to the farthest post on the Mackenzie nearly 500. Last winter three mails were sent to Peace river and none to Mackenzie. This winter three mails will go to Peace River Crossing and two to Chipewyan some 30 miles from the landing towards the Mackenzie. This is as far as the department has ever sent a mail in either direction, although at Vermillion on Peace river, 200 miles from the Crossing there is an important farming and trading settlement which has a 50 barrel roller process flour mill but no mail. North of Chipewyan trade to the amount of several hundreds of thousands of dollars is done annually, four steamboats are employed in the summer, and yet the post office department does not give a mail. The Hudson's Bay Company carries one winter mail throughout that vast territory for its own business purposes. But the government of Canada as represented by the post office department cannot afford to give the public a like service. Of course the service would not pay for itself, in stamps. But it would pay for itself many times over in facility of trade, which is the first purpose of mail service.

The failure to provide adequate mail accommodation for the new settlements and for the northern trade stands without excuse against the postmaster general and no accuracy of balance between revenue and expenditure will compensate the country for the disadvantage to and loss of business which the lack of adequate service occasions.

For Good Health

To preserve or restore it there is no better prescription for men, women and children than Ripan's Tablets. They are easy to take. They are made of a combination of medicines approved and used by every physician. Ripan's Tablets are widely used by all sorts of people—but to the plain, everyday folks they are a veritable friend in need. Ripan's tablets have become their standard family remedy. They are a dependable honest remedy with a long and successful record, to cure indigestion, dyspepsia, habitual and stubborn constipation, offensive breath, heartburn, dizziness, palpitation of the heart, sleeplessness, muscular rheumatism, sour stomach, bowel and liver complaints. They strengthen weak stomachs, build up run down systems, restore pure blood; good appetite and sound, natural sleep. Everybody derives constant benefit from a regular use of Ripan's Tablets. Your druggist sells them. The 5 cent package is enough for an ordinary occasion. The Family Bottle, 60 cents, contains a supply for a year.
